In a Heraclitan – or better Bergsonian – way, a flow of human experience leads to Culture and the development of children's action. According to Piaget, children are born with a very basic mental structure. Piaget (1952) defined a schema as 'a cohesive, repeatable action sequence.' Development occurs in children all over the world, whatever their culture.